

I recently launched a new “Civilization of Love” movement to help shift the arc of humanity in the direction of a more loving society. This project advances the building a world where love, defined as action for the good of one another, is the centerpiece of future human activity.

The “Love Revolution” project to encourage young people to visualize a Civilization of Love future.

In this project students of all ages are given the opportunity to artistically create works of art to express their visions of a future, where the adventure of loving is a reality. We’re cultivating a more vibrant, positive visualization of the future in the young, so they may be better equipped to build it.

Why

Too many visions of our human future in contemporary art and media are either dystopian or well-behaved, and advanced technologically. We need new visions that are neither apocalyptic nor sterile.

Nowhere do you see a depiction of a future where human beings are thriving peacefully and with love.

(I suppose it doesn’t make for an exciting video game or thrilling movie.)

None of these visions of the future project one where humanity will have mastered the fire of love
